

Julie Abramson

Julie Abramson is a lawyer with over 30 years regulatory experience at both State and Federal levels.

Since December 2015, Julie has been a part time Commissioner with the Productivity Commission having been reappointed for a further 5 years in 2020. Julie was also a part-time Commissioner with the Victorian Essential Services Commission from August 2014 to August 2016.

Her career in public policy includes working with Government, industry bodies (VECCI, Civil Contractors Federation), the private sector (National Australia Bank) and a Regulatory Agency (Australian Securities and Investments Commission). She has particular expertise in economic related regulatory matters such as financial services and competition policy. She also has strong policy skills in the Vocational Education sector as well as infrastructure and procurement policy.

Julie has a BA, LLB and LLM (Commercial Law) from Monash University. She is also a graduate of the Australian Institute of Company Directors (AICD).